

It is critical that the laws governing ownership of sources for media not be weakened. Already, the power of the media has become concentrated among a small number of people. The more concentrated this power, the more vulnerable we are as a society. We need independent voices. We need radical thought. We need to be informed. Eliminating or weakening these laws will weaken us as a nation. It will put us back a couple hundred years, and put us in the position of other nations whom we feel compelled to liberate.

There has never been a more important time for the United States to receive news and information from unbiased sources.
